The Snarl Collective

Beginnings

The Snarl Collective was born when its two founders got into a long conversation (first on Reddit, eventually over the phone) about the "depth of the concept of anonymity" and [quite related, in our minds] the novel The Crying of Lot 49. We still haven't met in person or even exchanged real names, and we don't plan to.

Muted Post Horn

Our version of the muted post horn is graphically closer to something Salvador Dali might choose. It's more of a powder horn or rhinoceros horn than a musical instrument. Anagrammatically it's (for instance) an open storm thud.

Credit Where Credit's Doo

We intentionally obscure which of us is more responsible for this or that production. The collective as a whole takes the blame or credit for all work.

Stuff We Make

So far we've posted philosophy and a Joyce-influenced "dreamsludge." We plan to release some playful math papers and source code. Something we have in common is a stack of unpolished or even just half-finished projects.
